

Panama the Process

To explore and understand the visual richness of the Canal Zone, Belzer took photographs and notes, and made sketches. She discovered created strong relationships between the geometries of both buildings and ships, which in turn led to gestures on paper and then in finished paintings. Her compiled palate of bright colors, combined with the geometric lines, convey the energy of the canal and its traffic in artworks that are simultaneously representational and abstract.